

MORNING APPEAL.

SATURDAY.....NOVEMBER 10, 1877

CONKLING'S SPLENDID POSITION.

We find in the last dispatches the following extract from a leading daily:

The Tribune thinks Roscoe Conkling has made a great gain, by the canvass, with everybody. Expecting his annihilation, he has reduced the adverse vote on the State ticket, carried the Senate and saved fighting ground for himself next year. He is able to point to the popular vote and declare that he is stronger in New York than Hayes in Ohio. His opponents hold that, except for the Rochester convention proceedings, the Republicans would have swept the State.

Roscoe Conkling is a hero. He is a born leader. He is proud and imperious and scornful of all meanness. He has so genuine a courage and so fearless a self-assertion as to awaken the hate rather than propitiate the temper of his enemies. Such a man, haughty and courageous, and of rare ability, is the natural object of the aversion of the envious, the malevolent and the disappointed. His absolute opposite and sworn enemy is Reuben D. Fenton, ex-Governor and ex-Senator of New York. Fenton is sleek, stealthy, jesuitical. In another age he would have given employment to poisoners and hostage to the clergy. Conkling is not only his successful rival, but the bane of his political existence. The two would be enemies even if they were and always had been separated by the Atlantic. Such is the law of antagonisms—the reverse of the affinities. Such a man as we have described Conkling to be concentrates the hate of the vagabonds, the impracticables, the schismatics and the combatant non-combatants. The result just achieved in New York—the electing of a Republican majority to the Legislature—is Mr. Conkling's most splendid victory. It shows what can be done by open and courageous warfare. Hayes has been contemptible enough to slight every Republican chieftain—notably the Camerons and Senator Conkling. The latter, like a true warrior, accepted the gauge of battle. He made no mincing work of it. When he struck back, he made the steel to ring and the blood to flow. He roused to the full of his majestic wrath. His anger at Rochester was terrible and splendid. The "man milliner" who opposed him with the prudish phrase of a dilettante was put to confusion. Conkling had been mercilessly denounced, persistently belied, most bitterly censured by Curtis and the other Hayesites, dissenters and malcontents. The Senator, moved by that instinct of true loyalty which is inherent in all chiefs and captains, has stood by Grant through evil and through good report. The pignies who hated Grant because he declined to let them crawl upon him, also hated Conkling for his fealty to the great General. Against all these, themselves encouraged by the pusillanimity of the President, Conkling has declared open, fearless, uncompromising war. Of course they complain, in the whining phrase of the dissembling and the unfair, that he should thus, at length assail them. Like the Iron Duke at Lisbon

He greatly stood at bay.

The result of the Legislative contest in the Empire State is a victory to be inscribed upon Conkling's sword. It marshals the Republican party the way that it should go. Submission to the death-dealing policy of the President is destruction—utter annihilation. Its every word and act is either an open or covert avowal of the sexless vagary of a No-party shibboleth or an insidious and malice-prompted attack upon the validity, perpetuation and National character of the Republican Party. Ohio repudiates Hayes, root and branch, at once condemning his preposterous and dishonest policy and rebuking the offensive impertinences of Stanley Matthews. New York, the fighting blood of her yeomanry aroused, has nobly seconded the gallant Senator who so promptly took up the gauntlet thrown from the White House. The lesson is worth heeding. It illustrates for the tenthousandth time, the inestimable value of courage and the essential need of a manful and a timely resistance. The way to win battles is to fight. Open, frank, valorous war is the way to real victory. Half-hearted support of the President's policy is equally contemptible with half-hearted opposition. A principle that is worth having is worth fighting for. The more pronounced and candid the avowal of enmity the heartier the fight. If the Republican Party would live it must combat the President; and, taking example of Roscoe Conkling, resist with scorn his insults and his treachery.

Washington, Nov. 9.—The Senate has confirmed the nomination of John Welsh, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to England.

On motion of Senator Sargent the United States Supreme Court to-day ordered the immediate issuance of a mandate (referring to the decision of the Circuit Court in the case of Sperry vs. Marquis de Briges), ordering the sale of the Calaveras Big Tree Grove.

WILL START UP.—The Reno Gazette of Monday says: We are informed that the reduction works of the Nevada quicksilver mines, near Steamboat Springs, will be ready for operation in a week or ten days. Messrs. Humbert & Co. mean business. They believed that a modification of White's roasting furnaces would work successfully, and tried a futile experiment. They will now use a furnace which has been proved a success.

A ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

We find the following notice of the late marriage of the mother of Lieut. Gov. Adams in the Eureka Sentinel. We infer it to have been copied from an Eastern paper. (There seems to be a misunderstanding of facts on the part of the writer, who speaks of one of the Adams family as "Mayor of Carson City." The facts are that we have no mayor and that his name is not Adams). Says our contemporary: Last week the Whitehall (N. Y.) papers contained the simple notice of the marriage of S. Lyman Dwight, of that place, to Mrs. Nancy Adams of Carson City, Nevada. Away back in the year 1827, Lyman Dwight was a lad 17 years old, poor, and accustomed to earn his own living. About that time he became devoted to a girl two years younger, and the young man's sentiments were questionably reciprocated by her. Her family was a wealthy one. About that period Dwight obtained employment on a sloop that plied on the waters of Lake Champlain, and while following that calling, left his native village, South Hero. The girl's parents learned of his vocation, and considering it too menial, demanded that all intercourse between the two should cease. Finding that the dictates of love overcome all obstacles while the young people were near each other, the girl was taken to St. Lawrence county to live, and as time went on she apparently forgot the choice of former days, for she married a man named Adams, who became infused with the gold fever of 1849, and departed for California. He was industrious, and accumulated a fortune from gold mining. About 1853 his family joined him on the Pacific slope and remained there until the children had become heads of families. Some time in 1857 the elder Adams died, and his widow remained single, devoting herself to the family, of which certain members have become prominent, one son at present filling the position of Lieutenant Governor of Nevada, while another is Mayor of Carson City in the same State. During this long interval Dwight lingered around the vicinity where he was born, and after embarking in several different callings, finally became a successful merchant. He was also married, but his wife died some three years ago. Learning by chance where Mrs. Adams lived, the attachment for his "first love" again asserted itself, and a correspondence was commenced. After a few months he for the second time proposed marriage, and no obstacle preventing, she came from Nevada a few weeks ago and met Mr. Dwight, the two not having seen each other since they were separated, at stated. On Sunday they met at the Iodine Spring House, South Hero—the home of their childhood—and were married by Rev. Geo. S. Guernsey. Thus, after a space of fifty years has elapsed, they are at last united, and living contentedly together at Whitehall.

Of the returned Indian fighters who have just got back from the wars, the Silver State of Tuesday evening says: Company C. First Cavalry, which left Camp McDermitt last June for the scene of the Nez Perces outbreak in Northern Idaho, arrived here last evening by rail from Ogden. The company has been in the field all summer, and traveled from McDermitt to Camas Prairie, thence by the Lolo trail to Eastern Montana and up the Yellowstone, where Joseph surrendered. This morning they marched through town under command of Lieutenant C. C. Norton, on their way to McDermitt. The men are bronzed from exposure, and their horses, nearly all of which were purchased in Montana or captured from the Indians, those which they rode in the early part of the campaign having given out, show that they experienced rough times in the far north. The company is ordered to Camp Bidwell, in Surprise Valley, for post duty this winter.

Of a trotting match which will take place to-day at Reno, Thursday's Gazette says: M. C. Lake's horse Muggins and A. C. Bragg's Tom Morgan have been matched to harness, mile heats, three in five; stake, $150 a side. The terms of the match compel Bragg to drive his own horse, while Mat. Davis, an experienced driver, will handle Muggins. A great deal of talk is heard in regard to the race, and every one has his own opinion. Common report says that Muggins is a better horse than he was Fair week, and if that be the Blacksmith's Dream must rise early. Start 'em up; who says fifty?

New York, Nov. 9.—Rumors of the death of John Morrissey are not confirmed.

Several papers have interviews with Conkling, who says he is well satisfied with the result of the election in the State. It shows the vitality of the Republican party. The agitation produced by the Rochester Convention stirred the Republican party to action.

George Francis Train comes to the front with the declaration that John Welsh is Tom Scott's agent; and that the reason of his selection for the English Embassy is that he might use his official influence to negotiate a loan of $15,000,000 to the Pennsylvania R. R. Co. Quien sabe?

Simmons, the self-accused blatherskite, who had himself taken in charge by the authorities for the murder of Jimmy, the blacksmith, has, since Jimmy's appearance alive upon the scene, been taken in charge for forgery. It is believed that he robbed Jimmy. Bad egg, that Simmons.

PIUTES ON THE WARPATH.

By the Bodie Standard of November 7, we are informed as follows: Men chopping wood on the eastern side of Mono Lake, for the mining companies of Bodie, have been threatened by Piute Indians in that vicinity, who swear by the "Great Father" that they will shoot every "white squaw" among them if they do not quit work, clear out and leave the aborigines in sole possession. What has given rise to this sentiment, people are at loss to conceive, unless it be the chronic jealousy of the red-skins on beholding the rapid growth of the white population, and contrasting the difference between their own debased condition with the continually increasing comforts and luxuries of the white settlers. If a little sense could be hammered into the clouded intellect of these red brothers and some of the chronic laziness thrashed out of them, they might some day comprehend the laws of nature sufficiently and grow ambitious enough to induce them to work for a living like the rest of mankind, instead of frittering their time away in gambling and stretching their lazy carcasses in sun's warm rays. It is to be hoped that the threats of these worthless creatures may prove but idle talk, yet it will not do to let it pass and take no preventives against an attempt at their fulfillment. Let all be on their guard, yet careful to do nothing to arouse the drowsy creature who is growing in his sleep. Throw a biting dog a bone rather than a stone. Let this be the motto of all.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Of a fatal accident which happened at Reno on Friday night last, whereby an old man named Granice was killed, the Reno Journal of yesterday morning says: Last Tuesday night an old man named Granice was fatally injured at Washoe. It seems that he was going from the house to get a bucket of water. In doing so he had to cross the N. & T. track. As he was returning a "light engine" came along—returning from helping a heavy wood train up the grade. The old man was crossing the track diagonally, and the engineer who saw him, and blew the whistle, supposed he had got off the track as he was on the opposite side from him and out of sight. But in passing, the side of the cow catcher struck Mr. Granice so violently that it knocked him 37 feet, landing him on the rocks. He was taken care of immediately, and Dr. Hogan summoned, but nothing could be done for him, and he died Wednesday night. He was 75 years of age and had been in the country two years, having left the East to spend his few remaining days with his son, D. Garnice.

The Austin Miners Union publishes an official notice in Wednesday's Reveille requesting all non-Union miners working in the Manhattan mines, who have been so working for a period of thirty days or more, to join the Union on or before the 12th instant. This is a repetition of the course recently adopted by all the Miners' Unions in the State. Leasers are excepted from the rule and request in question.

Austin is incubating a military company. The sounding of the Reveille apprises the world of the momentous fact.
